Perspective for Economics – From Marxist-Leninist Standpoint – with a Comment on Althusser and recently Sirohi, and Fidel Castro, with Mao

By Roberto Unger

I. My Analysis of the Economy

In fact an analysis is enough, what I call critique of political economy is actually an analysis – 'In addition to the general equivalent, and monetisation and exchange-value, even organic composition of capital and institutions of the state, I mean one must organise economics, of course, if we want Communism or the political left – smash the fascist petit-bourgeois first of course.'

II. Keynes as opposed to Analysis

I mean Keynes is then an argument which is called demand management which heightens employment and state planned agriculture and manufacturing and gets Locked in place because, let's face it, capitalism is more creative, innovative and dynamic and even works on a game to curate the economic company and offers you that for states.

III. State side innovation – with capitalist debate – let them handle their business and let us innovate and support the capitalists and develop a political dynamic of resistance – we call popular unity and rebellion in unions like Linera

In fact then state public sectors will be the simple argument – make a fraction – base and superstructure – all this is capital, with our side the public sector – that has already happened since as Sirohi argues the 1990s, now it is time only he means for popular unity and rebellion.

'I call the stuff I'm doing economic power, a running wealth is enough for the 1990s model'.

IV. A Comment from Fidel

In fact I mean he serves the people, in fact he is permanent revolution type leader, busy curating Communism – he even believes that one should be ridiculed and follow historical logics of development like Ecuador instead of joining the finance company movement on creativity alone.

So in fact I mean Althusser Sirohi argues – a simple plan that all of us follow the simple economics of simple ideas such as fiscal planning and leave it to the public and private to compete – you sound old and bureaucratic to me, Sirohi argues, it was all just about the recent crisis – which I argue was different from the 1990s it had no 'analysis.'
